

I CLAIM:

1. A punch for processing the socket on the surface of the head of a screw is comprised of a recess formed on one end of the body of the punch, a punching head protruding from the center of the recess; and multiple 5 wings extending from the sides of the punching head at a level lower than that of the head of the punch.